THURSDAY EVENING, FEB. 15, 1894.

PRINCE OF WALES ISLAND.—James Millar, who has long resided on Prince of Wales Island, and who, by reason of his being the first white settler and now controlling the largest interest, is referred to as the monarch of that island, has arrived here. Mr. Millar is located at Hunter's Bay, where he has been for four years in the business of catching and salting salmon.

The strange island of the Prince of Wales on which Mr. Millar has elected to make his home, lies at the mouth of Dixon's entrance and only about three miles from the northern line of British Columbia. The island is about 2 1/2 miles long and from 10 to 30 or 40 miles wide. It is singular in its make-up having a fringe of lowland all around. Toward the center are ridges of mountains, some of them reaching lofty peaks and covered with perpetual snow. There is magnificent timber in great quantities. It consists of spruce, fir, hemlock, splendid yellow cedar and a very superior cedar.

"The island has never been surveyed nor explored," says Mr. Millar, "and so far as I know, I think, a most inviting field for exploration. The Indians of whom there are probably some 3,000 or 4,000 are scattered around the island shores in little villages, usually of about 100 inhabitants each. They consume a variety of different fruits. Most of these I have in contact with are Hydras, at Hunter's Bay, and they are quite industrious as fishermen, and salters of salmon."—San Francisco Chron.
